Have a great holiday and try to watch The Masters on Sunday! Drew Kittleson, a sophomore at Florida State University, will be playing in his first Masters. Drew finished runner-up in the United States Amateur last summer.

Everyone root him on!

Tee Time Tips

Another Sunday and another win for Tiger. We have seen it before and we will see it again. Tiger is the best out there and is making his mark as best of all time! There is nothing like being at the golf tournament and watching these great athletes play at such high levels of competition.

We can all learn a lot from watching the guys and girls. One thing to look at in particular the next time you turn on the tube Sunday afternoon, is the player's routine and pace they move around the course. They prepare for the shot the same way every time and react with emotion to their shot the same way. It is amazing to see such discipline, but every great golfer knows that repetition and muscle memory are important in creating consistency and a swing that holds up under pressure. I see a lot of students I teach make inconsistent contact because they cannot remember what they did on the last swing. This is usually caused by hitting too many balls without any repetitive movements.

Next time you practice or play, work on your routine and see if you can create the same preparation for every shot. I bet you will see results in your swing because you will take less thought off the mechanics and let instincts become part of your swing!
